War to end all wars didn't

By Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

They called it "The Great War," and it was a titanic struggle that decimated Europe and killed the young men who were the brightest hope of that generation.

President Woodrow Wilson called it "The War to End All Wars," but he was sadly mistaken. When another conflict erupted 20 years later, "The Great War" became simply World War I.

The war began in 1914 over "some damn foolish thing in the Balkans," as German Chancellor Otto von Bismarck prophesied. A Serb nationalist stepped from a crowd in Sarajevo and shot the Austrian Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife, killing both.

Within weeks, the European continent was split into two camps, with Germany and Austria facing off against France, Russia and Great Britain. Millions of men fought on the Western and Eastern Fronts. All the combatants expected to make quick work of their enemies, but then all aspects of national power came to the defense of the nations, and the war quickly evolved into a stalemate.

Both fronts became killing machines, as generals and admirals, unused to the destructive power of the technologies they unleashed, still ordered attacks using the old rules of warfare. At the Battle of the Somme in 1916, 60,000 British soldiers were killed or wounded on just the first day. The Battle of Verdun — February to December 1916 — cost both German and French forces almost 800,000 casualties.

On the Atlantic, German submarines came close to strangling Great Britain as the tonnage of Allied shipping sunk rose.

The United States remained neutral through the war's first years. Wilson was re-elected president in 1916 with the slogan "He kept us out of war." But in 1917, Germany instituted unrestricted submarine warfare, and the U.S. Congress declared war.

The first American troops journeyed to France in June 1917.

Satisfaction is all about perspective

I was recently reminded of the Rolling Stone's song, Satisfaction as in "I can't get no" You would have to wonder, after all these years why Mick Jagger still can't get satisfaction. You would think that international fame and abundant fortune would at least get him up to "feeling no pain" and maybe "I'm alright."

As I've observed human nature I've noticed that we are very quirky people. You see, if you live like Jagger then a Motel 6 just doesn't cut it anymore. On the other hand, if you lived on Lib your entire life, hot and cold running water would be a luxurious bonus.

In my life, I've had the opportunity to span this range. Kathy Ann and I lived in Germany together as officers in the Army (I even had flight pay) and no kids with an exchange rate over 3:1. That was the life.

Then we got out of the Army (no jobs), I was in seminary and we lived as servants on a huge estate with horses. Kathy Ann was the maid and I mucked the stalls every morning at 6 a.m. That was not the life.

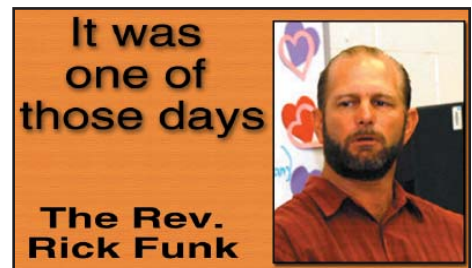

All in all, it has taught us to appreciate what we have and not get upset by what we don't have. This seems to be a helpful attitude on Kwajalein because often expectations and reality don't easily match up.

Sometimes we all think of Kwaj as a little slice of American life and too easily forget that this little slice is more than 2,000 miles away from some of the pie and about 5,000 miles away from the kitchen where the pies are made. In light of that, I'd like to say "thanks" to all the people in the service sector of our island who do so much for us; food service, community activities, retail and anyone else who puts up with our bickering.

So, the next time Surfway doesn't stock my favorite ice cream or AFN cuts out my sports program or the pizza from the snack bar arrives a half hour late, I think I will be satisfied by what I've got rather than complain about what I am missing. Jagger's not that much of a role model, anyway.

Former resident dies in Iraq

Marine Capt. Mike Martino spent first eight years on Kwajalein

Mig Owens
Assistant editor

Former 'Kwaj Kid' Capt. Michael D. Martino, 32, was killed Nov. 2 near Ar Ramadi, Iraq when his AH-1W Super Cobra helicopter crashed while flying in support of security and stabilization operations, according to the Department of Defense.

Martino was born on Kwajalein on Jan. 31, 1973, the youngest of three children. He lived on island until he was eight, when his family moved to Irvine, California. In 1996, he graduated from the University of Calif., San Diego with a bachelor's degree in economics and was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps.

According to a eulogy written by his friends and fellow Marines, read at a memorial service in Iraq Nov. 5, 1st lieutenant Martino graduated from The Basic School in the summer of 1998 and reported to Naval Air Station Pensacola, Fla. for flight training.

"He joined VT-2 and excelled in the flight syllabus," they said. "With his grades, he could have flown anything he wanted, but he wanted to fly helicopters." Martino was winged in July 2000, deployed once with Marine Light-Attack Helicopter Squadron-367 to Okinawa, and then volunteered for a FAC tour with 2nd Battalion, 1st Marines at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

He deployed with 2nd Battalion, 1st Marines in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom 2-1 where, according to his friends, his actions during the April 2004 Fallujah offensive earned him the Combat Action Ribbon and recommendation for the Bronze Star.

In December 2004, and following his tour with 2-1, Martino checked in to HMLA-369 where he served as the assistant S-1 officer and Airframes officer-in-charge.

"He flew with this squadron for almost a year and considered the Gunfighters as his family," said friends. They added that Martino was intense in everything he did, studying constantly and striving to be the best. "He was competitive with himself and eagerly absorbed knowledge in an effort to better his skills as a pilot and as an officer of marines."

"Mike Martino was not one of those guys who monopolized dinner conversations or would be first to sing karaoke at the bar. He was a quiet, reserved guy who could light up a room with a smile...We were fortunate because we did know him. He was a Gunfighter and he was our friend and brother."

According to Simone Smead, fellow Kwaj kid, Martino was seven years her junior. The two attended the same work functions as both their fathers worked for McDonnell Douglas during the late 1970s. Mark Thimsen, also a Kwaj kid, recalled that his parents were good friends with Bob Martino and his wife, Sybil, but said their children were quite a bit younger than him.

Kwajalein resident Sharon Hurst spent time with Martino on his first visit back to the island since he was 8. "He came out to Kwajalein from his Marine Base in Okinawa about two years ago after a 20-year absence. Ray Smead and Mike's dad worked out here together in the 70s. Mike wanted to do some diving while he was here and Ray knew that I would take good care of Mike." She added that on that visit, Martino commented that the island seemed so much smaller to him now than when he was 8.

"Mike is just a few years older than my son and we immediately hit it off," Hurst said. "He was a great dive buddy and a kind young man. Mike and I spent hours and hours diving that week he was here. He was so appreciative of my hospitality that when he got back to his Marine post in Okinawa, he sent me one of his company coins and a couple of lion statues from the local Okinawan culture. One statue was to keep out the evil and the other was to let in Marine Capt Mike Martino, one week prior to his death in Iraq. Martino was born on Kwajalein and lived on the island for eight years.

"I submit that the fabric and core of the American Spirit is extraordinarily patriotic. And we are justifiably proud of those who serve our country in uniform. In that regard, there are two national holidays to recognize the patriotic service of the members of our armed forces: Memorial Day honors the deceased and Veterans Day honors those who have served in all of our Armed Forces. It's significant that we as a nation pause on these two days to honor those who have served our country so faithfully,"

Purple Heart awarded Kwaj family member

By JO1(SW/AW) Jon Rasmussen

In a brief ceremony Oct. 28, Explosive Ordnance Disposal Mobile Unit 11 Commanding Officer, Cmdr. Martin Beck, awarded Aviation Ordnanceman 1st Class John Coulter the Purple Heart. Coulter received a gunshot to the leg while responding to an Improvised Explosive Device near Fallujah, Iraq in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Coulter is the son of Laverne and step-son of Ronald Arthur of Kwajalein.

Aviation Ordnanceman 1st Class John Coulter

Coulter's mother, Laverne, said, "First he was a Marine for 4 years and then joined the Navy to go Explosive Ordnance Disposal, which requires a certain mentality — this is John's 'niche' since he has been a pyro from age 4."

Navy EOD technicians are experts in detecting, identifying, rendering safe and disposing of all types of explosives and explosive ordnance that pose a hazard to personnel or property on land or under water. Navy EOD detachments are relied upon in the Global War on Terror to dispose of IEDs, which threaten coalition forces and civilians.

Coulter was wounded March 15, while deployed with EODMU 11 Detachment Seven after his team had spent the day responding to several IEDs. Upon reaching the scene of the last call, Coulter and his partner, Operations Specialist 2nd Class Justin Jewett came under attack. Jewett managed to reach cover, but Coulter was shot in the leg before he could get out of the open.

"I knew I had to get behind the truck, but my leg just wouldn't work," Coulter said.

That is when Jewett pulled his partner to safety and immediately began first aid. Jewett stayed with Coulter after the medic reached the scene and all the way to the field hospital.

Before going into surgery, Coulter was able to make a call back home to his wife, Brandy, to tell her that he was shot, but was OK.

"I was so glad that he got to call and tell me before the command called me; I don't know what I would have done then," Brandy said.

Although he could have opted to return home after his ordeal, Coulter was determined to complete the remainder of the deployment with his team. He returned to the team after only three weeks, faster than even his doctors had expected.

"The fact that he turned it around and was back up to us at almost a hundred percent within a three-week time frame was pretty amazing," Senior Chief Quartermaster Robert Zimmerman, Det. Seven leading chief petty officer said. "He personally expedited his own recovery faster than what was expected. His criteria for release was met earlier than what the doctors imagined it would be and that's not just a testimony to him, but also the advances we've made in field medicine."

Coulter's quick return inspired not only his fellow team members, but also the Soldiers and Marines that made up the Special Forces group that Det. Seven was a part of.

"Within our compound all three services were a real tight-knit group, everybody knew John's injuries and were all waiting for him to return," Zimmerman said. "When he did, it was a huge boost for morale for everybody to see him come back."

Now back on Whidbey Island, the support of the tight-knit EOD community was apparent near the end of Coulter's pinning ceremony when the right words just couldn't be found until a loud "Hoo-Yah" began with a single shipmate and reverberated through the ranks and each one came forward to show Coulter their support and appreciation for his commitment to duty.

the goodness. That was exactly the kind of man Mike was, always looking out for folks, even women that he had just met."

Hurst remembered one weekend evening when she and Martino went to the Yokwe Yuk Club to listen to music and shoot pool.

"There were about 70 Australian National Guard troops in the club that night. Mike was so proud to be a United States Marine Cobra pilot it made my heart shine watching him in the crowd of Aussies," she recalled. "He bartered and traded for one Australian's hat and company coins. You would have thought that he bought national treasures."

She said that when Martino left for home, they talked about him coming back to Kwajalein one day. He sent her several e-mails when he returned to Okinawa, but she said she lost track of him when he got deployed to Iraq.

What Hurst remembers most about Martino was his "kind and gentle nature, and for me of course, the fact that he was a great dive buddy who was so thrilled to be here diving with me."

Martino is survived by his mother, Sybil, father, Bob, brother, Robert, sister, Laurie and nieces, Devyn and Sydney.

Also killed in the helicopter crash, currently under investigation, was Maj. Gerald M. Bloomfield, 38 of Ypsilanti, Mich. Both Marines were with Marine Light-Attack Helicopter Squadron 369, Marine Aircraft Group 39, 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing, I Marine Expeditionary Force, Camp Pendleton. During Operation Iraqi Freedom, their unit was attached to 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing, II MEF (Forward).

Soldiers serve where needed

By Nell M. Drumheller
Editor

In 1942 American song writer Irving Berlin released a tune that personified what many men and women across the United States faced every day in that turbulent time. It was called: This is the Army, Mister Jones.

The lyrics described:

*We all have been selected from city and from farm
They asked us lots of questions, they jabbed us in the arm*

*We stood there at attention, our faces turning red
The sergeant looked us over and this is what he said:
This is the Army, Mister Jones
No private rooms or telephones
You had your breakfast in bed before
But you won't have it there any more*

Today's veterans faced stone-faced noncommissioned officers made from the same mold who turned the familiarity of civilian life topsy-turvy, guiding them to become Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen.

The contingent of Soldiers assigned to the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll/Reagan Test Site is serving far from home, wearing the uniform that signifies they are prepared to go to war. In today's terrorist-laden climate the reality of facing fire is real.

Lt. Col. Steve Wilhelm joined the Army more than 21 years ago as a freshman in college. "A couple of friends joined with me. We all wanted to try something different – to be all that we could be. Sound like Stripes," the ground-based mid course defense system integrated product team lead and range executive officer asked, referring to the 80s' movie.

Wilhelm entered the Army with no preconceived notions, "I didn't have any real expectations — that probably wasn't real smart when I enlisted, but I was 'drinking the cool aid' so to speak. It's been a great organization and [I] have never regretted joining," he said. He added that when he considered entering the military that in his mind there was only one choice. "When we joined, we never shopped around. When we decided to join, we only talked about the Army. It seemed like a good fit."

Two other Americans who have made the Army a career are Maj. Johnny Davis, USAKA provost marshal and Chief Warrant Officer Phyllis Mitchell, USAKA food service and medical evaluator.

Both are relatively new to the Kwajalein community, Davis has been on island for three months and Mitchell arrived in July; old-timer Wilhelm as been on Kwajalein for two and a half years.

Kwajalein is an Army community, even though the green-suiters make up less than one percent of the population. This is what is known as a GOCO, or government-owned, contract-operated facility.

Though the Soldiers are the minority in the community, their dedication to their chosen field – being professional Soldiers – is as strong as military members serving throughout the world.

Davis, after 19 years in uniform, said the Army "Allowed more opportunities to lead at various levels i.e. platoon, company, battalion and brigade," than other branches of the service. And that his career highlight is "The opportunity to serve in whatever capacity to keep our country the best in the world."

Mitchell started down the path to 'go Army' at a young age, "In my junior year of high school I made the decision to join the Army because at that time my older sister was very sick. I didn't want to burden my parents with a college bill so I decided to join the Army. In the Army I could get a college education, plus job training and experience that I could use if I decided not to re-enlist. Since I've been in I have two college degrees and will pursue another one next year," she said of the beginning of her now 23-year-long career.

Mitchell admits that while she enjoys the leadership challenges of being a warrant officer that separation from her family on long deployments can be challenging.

Wilhelm added that keeping "our kids grounded, focused and involved," is a challenge that he and his wife, Leigh, face during their moves. "Being an Army kid can be tough, moving around, changing schools often, losing/making new friends. It's important for my wife and me to minimize the effect frequent moves can have on our kids. By the way, I have a great wife and two of the best kids anyone could ask for," Wilhelm said.

Team building is a highly regarded skill in the military. Wilhelm recalled a time he was a company commander in Gitmo, "the Haitians in one of my camps were participating in a disturbance. One minute my Soldiers were in full riot gear dodging tent poles, baby food jars, etc. and a few minutes later, they had quelled the riot and were bringing in the chow truck to feed the people in the camp. They realized, just as I imagine the Soldiers do now in Iraq, that there were only a few instigators, and the majority of the folks were peaceful and good intentioned," he said.

While in the service the military can seem to be all consuming; but there is life after fatigues. Mitchell has her eye on retirement. She said her next assignment will be "Ft. Living Room; an Army term used for retirement or separation from the service. My plan is to retire." Her next stage of life will make her a veteran. This week she wants to show her appreciation for the veterans who have come before her, "I would like to say thank you to all of our veterans and fellow service members.

Both Wilhelm and Davis are planning on staying in the Army for a bit longer with Davis wanting to go either to Ft. Drum in New York next or a tour in Korea. Under ideal conditions Wilhelm would head to Huntsville, Ala. next. "My main goal now is to be a program manager. I'm an acquisition corps officer and I would like to be in charge of a program," he said.

Leaders make leaders. Mitchell said that during her career she has learned from example, "I have several military mentors active and retired from general officers to senior noncommissioned officers. They all have been great in providing a listening ear, correction when needed, guidance or just a phone call or e-mail to see how me and my son were doing. My most influential mentor is not military, and that person is my mother. She's the one that really keeps me grounded and has been one of my greatest supporters."

The Army has six core values. These values, loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage, are taught and encouraged at all levels and are integral to leadership.

Wilhelm said he best identifies with loyalty, "I'm a big believer in giving it and hopefully inspiring it in people who work for me."

While the Army changes as times require, Wilhelm recognizes that traditions are important. If he could look into the future he said he thinks he would see, "Victorious in the war on terror and transformed, but maintaining true to our culture and values. I think the Army is a great institution. I mean a June Gallup poll shows the American public has more confidence in the military than in any other institution — I mean, who wouldn't want to be part of that?"

War of the Worlds. An ordinary man has to protect his children against alien invaders in this science fiction thriller, freely adapted from the classic story by H.G. Wells. Ray Ferrier (Tom Cruise) is a dockworker living in New Jersey, divorced from his first wife Mary Ann (Miranda Otto) and estranged from his two children Rachel and Robbie (Dakota Fanning) and (Justin Chatwin), of whom he has custody on weekends. On one such visitation, looking after the kids becomes a little more difficult when, after a series of strange lighting storms hit his neighborhood, Ray discovers that a fleet of death-ray robotic spaceships have emerged nearby, part of the first wave of an all-out alien invasion of the Earth. Transporting his children from New York to Boston in an attempt to find safety at Mary Ann's parents' house, Ray must learn to become the protector and provider he never was in marriage.

Hustle and Flow. One man's struggle to rise above his circumstances prompts him to try a career in music in this acclaimed drama from writer and director (Craig Brewer). Djay (Terrence Howard) is a low-level pimp and drug dealer who scraped together a living in the ghettos of Memphis, TN. Djay isn't happy with his life, and the realization that he's reached the same age when his father unexpectedly died has made him start thinking about changing his ways. Djay has always had a gift for spinning stories, and after picking up a cheap keyboard, he begins picking out beats to go along with his rhymes. After bumping into an old high-school buddy who works in gospel music, Key (Anthony Anderson), Djay decided to take the plunge and remake himself as a rapper.

Following a parade through Paris, Army Col. Charles E. Stanton said: "Lafayette, we are here," a phrase that gave heart to the Allies.

Army Gen. John J. Pershing commanded the American Expeditionary Force. His mission was to join the fight, but only as an American Army under American commanders. The allies wanted American units piecemeal as replacements for their own decimated forces. Adding to this pressure was revolution in Russia and its pullout from the alliance.

German and Austrian forces could concentrate on the Western Front, and in a gamble that almost paid off, German forces attacked toward Paris before the Americans' strength could be mustered.

French and British leaders asked for American units to stop the Germans. The 1st Infantry Division at Cantigny; the 2nd Infantry Division, which included the 4th Marine Brigade, at Belleau Wood; and the 3rd Infantry Division becoming known as the "Rock of the Marne" showed that Americans were up for the fight. Some 60,000 American soldiers and Marines had saved Paris.

From May until the armistice in November 1918, more than 50,000 Americans died in battle. More died of illnesses. At the war's end — at "the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month" — about 113,000 Americans had paid the ultimate sacrifice.
